Healing Hearts

THIS SPRING

Purchase an inexpensive terra cotta pot. There are numerous easy online videos showing how to paint and seal a pot for use outdoors. Paint your pot in honor of your baby. Consider including:

- Your baby’s name
- A symbol for your child such as a butterfly or a flower
- A symbol for yourself such as a heart or a sun

Choose a plant to go in your pot; something colorful or lush and green. You can write a message to your baby on a slip of paper and place it in the soil with the plant you’ve chosen. Show a friend or family member your potted plant and explain what it means to you.

40 YEARS OF SERVICE

2020 marks the 40th anniversary of the Infant Death Center (IDC). We have been offering bereaved parents resources and support for four decades, and as we begin a new decade, we want to continue to offer resources that are relevant and valuable.

It is an honor to walk beside someone as they make their way on their journey through the ultimate heartbreak. Listening to stories of life and loss is an incredible privilege. Many thanks to those parents who have attended events, shared their stories, served as peer support for other parents and allowed themselves to be vulnerable.

In this issue you will read the personal story of a Waukesha County mom who found healing and hope after the death of her beautiful baby girl, Ari. Please consider sharing your story with us as well. There is a large community of grieving families, and the professionals who work with them, that need to hear these stories. Everyone wants to know that they are not alone; all the more so for someone who is trying to navigate an unthinkable loss.

Make 2020 the year you attend an infant loss event, support group, or share your story with others who need to know they are not alone. Contact me at jodonnell@chw.org or (414) 337-4571 to find out more about how the IDC can support you on your grief journey and how you can help others along the way.

love and grief are interconnected— you can’t have one without the other. Grief exists because love did first. We simply cannot heal or recover from our grief – our love for our child still exists, therefore our grief will remain a part of us. And if we are open to it, growth in grief is completely possible, but only if we choose to allow it.

Our grief journey began in 2016, when our second child was diagnosed in utero at 13 weeks with Trisomy 13, a life limiting chromosomal disorder. Immediately, the innocence and blissful naivety of pregnancy was stripped and replaced with fear and anxiety. The looming possibility that our child might not survive left us in limbo. Our faith was our rock as we focused on hope and shared life experiences filled with unconditional love with our unborn baby.

Our daughter, Ari, a courageous, brave and beautiful “lion of God”, was born on April 13. She survived 9 hours and 51 minutes on this earth. To us, that was not nearly enough time. But Ari, in that short amount of time, did exactly what I believe she was called to do— impact our lives so fiercely and forever, that we had no other option but to allow her death to change us and change us for the better.

In the beginning, it was a daily battle to choose better, not bitter. To access the feelings I wanted to feel I had to be conscious of the choices I made.

It was not overnight and it was not easy. It still takes daily practice, but choosing better with everything is possible.

None of us chose to be in this place. What we can choose, however, is what to do with our pain. Don’t waste it. Grief is a gift, a gift that exists only because of the great love we have for our child. Grief is our lesson, and our child is our teacher. Leaning into the areas where we feel the most resistance, where it is darkest and messiest, is where we will find the most growth. I believe a beautiful life after loss is out there for us all, but it won’t just happen. We need to take action and be an active participant in our journey.

Sharing our story has allowed me to support and help other bereaved parents walking a similar journey. Since June 2018, I have been supporting bereaved parents. I formed Better Not Bitter Mom LLC to offer constructive and continuous support through group and 1:1 coaching, an online course— the 4:13 MOVE:ment Method— live events, speaking engagements, resource guides, Ebooks and social media. I help bereaved parents transform their pain into finding purpose, possibility and forward movement on their grief journey.

Though it is unfair, and unbearable at times, we were never promised a specific amount of time with our child. We are not even promised the next minute here ourselves. But we are, however, aware of the infinite love that continues to grow for our child beyond the hands of time and the preciousness of each human being and the impact they make on our lives.

Use your pain, your grief, your love, to choose better today. Choose to live. Choose to treat yourself well. Choose to love harder. Choose to do amazing things. Choose to make a difference. Choose better, not bitter.

You have the power to choose.

HEALING CORNER
The Angel of My Tears

By author unknown

How do you love a person
Who never got to be?
Or try to envision a face
You never got to see?
How do you mourn the death of one
Who never got to live?
When there’s nothing to feel good about
And nothing to forgive?
I love you, my little baby,
My companion of the night.
Wandering through my lonely hours,
Beautiful and bright.
What does it mean to die before
You ever were born?
To live the lovely night of life
And never see the dawn?
Ah! My little baby,
You lived like anyone!
Life’s a burst of joy and pain
And then, like yours, it’s done.
I love you, my little baby,
Just as if you’d lived for years.
No more, no less, I think of you,
The angel of my tears.
